Word of the Week:

Reflective

Penguins have been learning a five sentence story each week to plot on a story mountain. Alfie has demonstrated how reflective he is by linking similar themes/vocabulary across the weeks. As a new story is introduced, or read aloud, Alfie will put his hand up to suggest different words the author could have used. These suggested words have been taught in previous weeks. Well done Alfie.

In Neptune, we have four very reflective children. We have been writing a description in English and revisited lots of the features needed such as expanded noun phrases and relative clauses. After walking round the classroom to read each other's ideas and reviewing the features we had included so far, four children decided to start their initial ideas again stating they had not stuck to the objective or included the relevant features! Amelia, James, Liam and Mya all did this! There were many improvements to their second draft as a result of this too!

Charlie in Lifeboats has shown how reflective he can be in so many areas of learning. He has taken on board feedback about phonics and punctuation as well as maths. An all round reflective practitioner!
